LEVEL UP WITH ABDUL DAYYAN

Abdul Dayyan is pursuing his eleventh grade (science) from Syed Abid Hussain Senior Secondary School, Jamia Millia Islamia, New Delhi. His mother is the sole bread earner of the family. With a passion for studying computer science alongside his ongoing hafzah at the local madrasa, Abdul Dayyan carries with himself an optimistic outlook towards the future ahead. He received funds amounting to 30k as his yearly fee and is progressing with his studies through the challenging pandemic times. Outside his formal education, Abdul Dayyan has been learning Japanese and wishes to study at Kyoto University someday.

KHADIJAH BINT KHUWAYLID (RA)

Mother of the Believers

Today, we find people idolising so many persons in this world. They might be good, but are they really perfect? One perfect role model, who was one of the most beautiful souls ever is Khadijah bint Khuwaylid (RA). She was a renowned businesswoman. She spent her wealth to feed and clothe the poor & assist her relatives financially. This quality of hers teaches us that when Allah grants us wealth, we shouldn't forget that it is from the Almighty God and we shouldn't spend it uselessly. We should realise that with every penny that He grants us, comes responsibility, the responsibility of spending it in the right way. Though she was rich, intelligent, and elegant, she was always humble and God-fearing. In spite of all her great qualities, there was not even an ounce of pride in her. We should try to adopt this quality of hers and should always remember that our wealth and respect are both from Allah and to Him is our return. We will be questioned about all the blessings granted to us in this world. She was as pure as rainwater and didn't have grudges against anyone. She always looked into the character of a person, rather than their external appearance. She looked for the good in everyone and in every situation. She was twice-widowed, but she had several suitors asking for her hand in marriage because of her wealth and status in society. Muhammad (PBUH) was a really handsome young man, and though he was not as wealthy as her, it was mainly because she was impressed with his honesty, humbleness, and good character that she sent him her marriage proposal. Similarly, we shouldn't hold grudges against anyone and also, we shouldn't judge people based on their external appearances, especially when choosing a life partner because beauty is only temporary and gives us nothing, but a good character reflects good faith and piety which pleases God. What can be more beautiful than holding our partner's hand and entering the eternal abode after Allah gives us the good news of Paradise? When Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) used to climb up to the cave of Hira and used to stay there for very long periods pondering over the reality of life, she would always support him without any complaint. From this, we learn that there's more than just being personally good; it's to support other good people, cooperate and encourage. When nobody believed the Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) and when most rejected him saying that he was lying about the revelation that had come down to him, she stood beside him and supported him and his cause both emotionally and financially. She trusted him completely, but she never questioned him or doubted him. And when he conveyed greetings from Allah and Angel Jibreel (AS) to her and also gave her the glad tidings of Paradise, she was overjoyed on knowing that she had been granted paradise. Tears started trickling down her cheeks realising that Allah had recognised her efforts. Such was her humbleness and such was her faith. When she died, it was not just Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) who had lost a loving wife, but the orphans of Mecca lost a loving mother, the needy lost a compassionate hand, and the movement of Islam had lost the greatest supporter and believer. But she left behind a legacy to take further, an example to be followed.
